That's why they're getting all the other free concerts (weird Philadelphians) for this and why they waited so long to do it. That's a huge level of luck that they've brought in a band who can use the same kind of set-up that they have for their own shows (plus probably a few hundred thousand more than the smaller venues do). But, they can't be in it for the money. They're chasing a dream they know is going to be blown away. I'm sure they're watching this on their PCs and mobile devices while they sleep at night. Install the Google Earth Plug-in. Open the Google Earth Plug-in with Google Earth. Open the Addins. Open the Addins menu. Select the Autodesk Autocad 2007 Plug-in. Select the Check-box and close the Addins menu. Open the Google Earth window. Select Create or use existing Google Earth map. Select the Create button. On the add-in window, select Create. Select OK to save the map. I really wish there was an easier way, especially when trying to add Google Earth maps to websites. Facebook Fires Steve Jobs' Ex-VP of Ads - michael_dorfman ===== TimothyFitz I would be really surprised if this was the real reason. It's being reported in the media, and there's no denying that Jobs is an influential figure, and he's easily the most powerful person on Facebook. And he didn't name names, so it's hard to assume this was the reason, and it makes no sense to assume that he's giving something away about "everything". Either he's very well-connected, and the media sources are mistaken (it's possible but doubtful), or something else is going on. ~~~ adrianwaj I've been thinking about that. Facebook was a good bet, and it became a strategic bet, probably when they were on the verge of going public. He could have set the IPO up for failure by putting on a shake-up, if he wanted to justify some massive compensation for himself. ~~~ brlewis The counterargument here is that Facebook's IPO plans were never in jeopardy, so such a shake-up would have been meaningless. (It would have been a signal that he thought it was about to happen, though.) ----- notsmart The first thing I thought when I saw the headline was: "Does he really need that much money?" ~~~ gojomo From
