Britain's finest ever B-boy is running and rolling on the streets of Brixton this summer. For almost two decades, the Brixton campus of the much-loved UK university Borough Market has staged a monthly event to bring rappers, DJs, breakdancers and other producers together to make dance music. The event has attracted some of the biggest names in the dance game and spawned its own genre of music, laden with choppy but addictive rhythms. After 12 years of the calendar launch the summer event will also be run by a different organisation. "London Borough Market has evolved through many different incarnations, and It's not for hunting, but for preparing carcasses before slaughter. The movement of livestock through mountainous terrain to slaughterhouses in Italy, known as "porzione," has helped keep vast quantities of meat in people's bellies, feeding the industry and providing jobs. Italy is the second-largest market in Europe for sheep, beef and pork, according to Livestock's Long Shadow: Environmental Issues and Options, a report released Thursday by the United Nations Environment Programme. More than 5 billion kg (11.2 billion pounds) of meat sold in Italy was produced by livestock, mostly in sheep and cattle, the report said. But high demand and surging demand in less developed countries has outstripped the animals' ability to keep up. While supplies meet around 80% of demand in Europe, this year the shortfall is forecast to be around 160 million head of livestock, according to the United Nations report. "The porzione has become increasingly an endgame system. It's not a system which we can call sustainable. We need to stop this, and this is not easy," Francesco Majolo, a spokesman for the Italian Farmers Union, told The Associated Press. The porzione system has been a constant throughout Italian agriculture for centuries, since moving animals along narrow and often impassable roads kept costs down and kept meat affordable. Increasing demand in countries such as China and India, as well as rising public appetites, has meant more animals are needed. For a country of only 5 million beef cows and 50 million sheep, there aren't as many carcasses to go around as there used to be. "We can't produce as much as we need, not only to meet the demand in Italy, but to meet the needs of the other 3e33713323
