In the world of mobile app development, you need to have a solid understanding of mobile application security. But how do you even start? This fast-paced, interactive session will help you gain a better understanding of the most important security topics needed to ensure the security of your mobile applications and their data, as well as how to address them. This session will help you stay ahead of what the best apps are doing to gain a competitive advantage. This session will equip you with the skills to: Understand the most critical security issues for mobile app development. Explain the essential tips to create a secure mobile application and protect from potential issues. The primary objective of this study is to evaluate the safety of a recombinant humanized monoclonal antibody (CR9114) against the CD11c monoclonal antibody in combination with combined chemotherapy and interleukin-2 therapy. CR9114 is a recombinant humanized monoclonal antibody directed against CD11c. CD11c is a monoclonal antibody which has been shown to enhance the toxicity of IL-2 therapy in human tumor cell lines. The CD11c monoclonal antibody can inhibit IL-2-induced lymphokine production, and can redirect other lymphocytes involved in IL-2-induced effects (such as natural killer and cytotoxic cells). CD11c is expressed on a variety of tumor cells including breast, ovarian, prostate, and other carcinomas. CD11c has been shown to be expressed at low levels on B cells and T cells and other normal lymphoid tissues. CR9114 is designed to target CD11c using the human IgG1 backbone and is intended to minimize toxicity in normal tissues. A Phase II clinical trial in non-Hodgkin's lymphoma and melanoma is evaluating the effect of CD11c monoclonal antibody on IL-2 induced cell lysis * Includes publications given by the data provider as well as publications identified by ClinicalTrials.gov Identifier (N 570a42141b
