Agrobacterium rhizogenes ATCC15834 shows promising potential for genetic transformation of the two-spotted spider mite, Tetranychus urticae Koch. Genetic transformation of tetranychine spider mites, Tetranychus urticae Koch, with the widely used Ti plasmid-based vector pCAMBIA1301 is an attractive method to develop transgenic strains that can express transgenes in response to environmental stimuli. Here, we report the first successful genetic transformation of T. urticae with the Ti plasmid-based vector pCAMBIA1301. The Agrobacterium rhizogenes strain ATCC15834, which had been found to be a highly efficient inducer of hairy roots in various plant species, was used to transform T. urticae. The effects of both bacterial and spider mite genotypes were analyzed after selection of hairy roots. Callus formation was observed in most cultures from the leaf-derived explants. All hairy roots induced by the selected strain contained plasmids as confirmed by polymerase chain reaction. The resultant transgenic hairy roots were well developed, and were found to be highly stable. The transgenic hairy roots grew to a height of 10 mm within 1-2 months, and some produced new shoots and twigs. Histochemical analysis revealed that hairy roots contained GUS activity, indicating the localization of introduced genes in hairy roots. The efficiency of the method has been compared with the conventional plasmid DNA-mediated transformation using the same promoter from pCAMBIA1301 for both hairy roots and transgenic lines. The comparison of the efficiency of the two methods indicated that the transformation efficiency was comparable in spider mite species with different genotypes. Based on these findings, A. rhizogenes ATCC15834 is shown to be promising for genetic transformation of T. urticae. The pathways used by thyroid-stimulating hormone to activate an increase in cyclic AMP in thyrocytes have been studied. It was found that the increase in cyclic AMP was dependent on both activation of the adenylate cyclase system and breakdown of intracellular cyclic AMP, with the rate of degradation probably much greater than the rate of synthesis. The kinetics of the cyclic AMP response to the hormone were also studied. Studies were made to see whether the response to TSH was homologous in other tissues. It was found
