[Diagnosis, therapy and prophylaxis of venous thromboembolism in elderly patients after acute care surgery: the "Meeting the requirements" (MOTH) study]. Elderly patients are at high risk of venous thromboembolism (VTE). The aim of this study was to optimize VTE diagnosis and therapy in elderly patients. In a 12-month prospective survey, data from 942 hospitalized patients with acute care surgery were collected. During hospitalization, 631 patients received no thromboprophylaxis. The remaining 311 patients received low-dose LMWH-therapy, who were followed during a period of 3 months. Primary outcome was overall venous thrombosis (VTE). Secondary outcomes included VTE incidence in these 631 patients, VTE incidence after thromboprophylaxis in the 311 patients, and LMWH-associated bleeding. Overall 30-day mortality rate of the 942 patients was 4.6%. The incidence of VTE was 3.2% in the surgical in-hospital treatment (N=631), 3.3% in the LMWH-treated patients (N=311), and 1.2% in the observation period (N=171). A prophylactic effect of LMWH on VTE could not be demonstrated. In total, 13.7% of patients had a LMWH-associated bleeding. The final incidence of all VTE and VTE in LMWH-treated patients did not differ significantly (p=0.323) from the patients without thromboprophylaxis. The final incidence of VTE in patients with LMWH was significant lower than in those without thromboprophylaxis (p=0.009). In this study, no reduction of VTE incidence by LMWH was observed
