I've been meaning to write a simple Application to do quite a bit with the new SDK for a while now, and have just been putting it off until now. I thought I'd share the result here in case it might help someone else too. First up, a simple "Hello World" application that uses a Launchpad API object to perform a simple Launchpad action. To do this, you just pass an object that matches the launchpad JSON structure to the execute() method. You can then specify a result to be returned back to the calling Activity, and in this case it's an intent to call the Gallery application. You might want to actually do something more complicated with the launchpad here, but this simple example will do. class HelloWorld extends Activity { /** ***** */ private ListView listView; /** ***** */ public void onCreate ( Bundle savedInstanceState ) { super.onCreate ( savedInstanceState ); // the launchpad object List list = new Launchpad ( this ); LaunchpadResult result = list.execute ( new LaunchpadAction ( Constants.GALLERY ) { /** ***** */ @Override public String getResultName ( ) { return String.valueOf ( ( ( Gallery ) Constants.GALLERY ).getTile ( ) ); } /** ***** */
