Description: Cambridge University Press. Leipzig: 2015..ISBN: 978-3-0309-2227-3.Insulin receptor kinase activity in human gastric epithelium and gastric cancer. The gastric epithelium is not a typical insulin target tissue. The aim of this study was to investigate whether the insulin signaling cascade is present and active in this tissue. The presence of phosphotyrosine on the insulin receptor and its autophosphorylation were investigated in gastric epithelium of healthy volunteers and gastric carcinoma. Enzyme-linked immunosorbent assay (ELISA) was used for measuring insulin receptor auto-phosphorylation and tyrosine phosphorylation of the IRS-1 (insulin receptor substrate-1) and SHC (Src homology 2 and collagen homology) proteins. Insulin receptor kinase activity was measured in gastric epithelium from 32 healthy individuals and in gastric tumors from patients with gastric carcinoma. Insulin receptor tyrosine phosphorylation and insulin receptor auto-phosphorylation were detected in gastric epithelium of healthy individuals. Both were markedly reduced in the gastric tumors. Phosphorylation of IRS-1, SHC, and phosphatidylinositol 3-kinase (PI3K) was detected in gastric epithelium. Insulin receptor kinase activity was present in gastric epithelium and was not impaired in gastric tumors. These results indicate
