The instruction was proper. It was apparently given on appellants' request. No error appears. Appellants' contention that the evidence shows as a matter of law that no verdict for them could be returned is without merit. The court charged the jury: "You are instructed that one of the claims made by the plaintiff is that the defendants were negligent in the maintenance of the sidewalk and the streets in front of their residence. "The plaintiffs are bound by the law which forbids a plaintiff in a civil action from suing for a wrong which has already been remedied. "The jury will give consideration to the plaintiffs' claim in this respect as an offset against the claims made by the plaintiffs for their damages and in arriving at a verdict. "It will also consider the alleged trespass in the same manner. The plaintiffs are bound by the law which bars them from recovering damages for alleged injuries which have been cured by the law." *310 This charge was correct. The statute so provides. The charge was apparently given on appellants' request 81e310abbf
