What's new in 10 Miles To Safety:

Monday, February 16, 2014 This week's episode of No Time To Spare has a lot to answer for before we finally get to the main events of this week's episode. A few weeks ago I mentioned that after three episodes featuring the return of Sherlock Holmes, we would get a full television adaptation. Well, it didn't turn out to be quite as imminent as we were led to believe. Obviously a lot of effort went into getting to this episode and this was one of three challenges that Russell T. Davies had to overcome. Sherlock's reappearance was the second, while the production of both radio and television versions of Edward Cornell's excellent Sir Arthur Conan Doyle The Life and Opinions of a Liberal was the third. We know that Davies was able to cope with the first two things. Davies replied to an article by Peter Friend speaking about the new series of Sherlock to the Guardian in December: It's fun to think that there is a kid in North Croydon in the year about 800 who was there, not a few years later, to hear the professional detective who had solved crime throughout Victorian London and was taken even by the great consulting criminal himself. I really hope he'll be there to see the new series. I'd give him a talk. But I'm very secretive about the plot - like Mr Moffat is, I'm sure. I think a lot of people still believe that it's possible to revive a classic television programme. It's fun to think so. I think that's a mistake. They're shot. They're filmed. They're complete. I think every time it happens there's just a bit of nostalgic yearning on the part of the people who want to see it. I think it's a very short-lived phenomenon and it never, ever comes back, in the same way that dramatic TV does. And I don't know why. But I can hear it... In my mind, it's like a film that says, it was absolutely every day in the pub and it just disappeared. It's like a classic car. It's a classic car, but it's old

Q: Highcharts - updating multiple series in one go

Just a simple question, and I'm not sure if it's a Highcharts question. I have two series, one has 100 points, the other has 400. I want to update both of these at once. I do something like:

chart.series.forEach(function(s) {
  s.setData(,true);

But it does nothing. If I copy and paste the new

data into both series' data arrays, the chart updates without a problem. Am I missing a step? Thanks! A: You can do this chart.series.forEach(function(s){ s.setData(, true); s.hide(); }) Updated fiddle Q: Can't make PyCharm recognize virtualenv correctly? OSX 10.10.5 Python 2.7.5 PyCharm Professional 4.5.5 I was having some trouble getting PyCharm to recognize/reuse my virtualenvs when I switched to PyCharm from Eclipse. I found this explanation of virtualenv, and realized that I was using venv and thus not actually using the virtualenv. (As such, something was screwing me up!) So, I switched to
