In this article, we will introduce the image-editing basics, basic Photoshop commands, and easy-to-learn how-to techniques for Photoshop. Getting Started with Photoshop Photoshop can be a very useful and powerful tool when properly used, and beginners can benefit from a more in-depth knowledge of the software's features and techniques. No matter how you have learned to use Photoshop, you will probably find that applying the basic principles in this section will make you a more efficient and effective user. Start Photoshop and select New from the File menu in the upper-left corner. A new canvas opens in Photoshop, and you are ready to make some basic edits. You can have multiple documents open at one time, but we will focus on a single image here. At the top of the Photoshop window, there is a bar at the bottom of the screen with many of Photoshop's tools. You can use the tools from the top bar to change the size and resolution of the image, rotate, crop, adjust the brightness and contrast, add cropping guides, and use the pen tool. However, using the tools from the top bar does not provide all the capabilities available in Photoshop, and it's easy to get lost in the menu. For that, it is much better to use the tools on the bottom bar. These tools provide more options and let you make finer, more detailed edits. In the next few sections, we will introduce the tools on the bottom bar. Be sure to review the tutorials that teach you about some of the tools on the bottom bar. Selecting an Image Photoshop is an image editing program, so we will begin with the basics of selecting an image to edit.

Selecting an image for editing is very important, as we will be altering the image with the selected tool.

Photoshop has a handy feature that makes it easy to select an image.

When you click on an image in Photoshop, Photoshop automatically selects an object in the image that you can work with. This is very convenient, but it does have some limitations that you should be aware of. For example, if you click on a bright area of an image, Photoshop will select that area, but if you click on a dark area, you will have selected an area that is not as bright as other areas in the image. This is because if you click on a white object, you will

Factbox on bailouts - kierank ===== saq2 _ "The level of aid needed to save this sector is €50 billion a year for each of the next four years. It is a big ask of taxpayers and Germany and other Europe's largest economies cannot afford to do this, absent wide market coordination." _
Could someone from Europe explain why their tax base does not allow for such a bailout? _ "After all, if you ask the liberal and conservative parties in Germany what their main concern is it is not the banking sector, but high unemployment and the low level of growth in their country." _ Banks create jobs, as does everyone involved in manufacturing, trade, services, etc. _ "Yet the German market is also a hugely important strategic market, with the US accounting for just $30bn of its GDP and Japan, China, the UK, France, India, Korea, Russia and other emerging markets, accounting for the other $50 billion." _ Could someone shed some light on the logic that a well-run corporate lending system, which rewards job creation, is more important than manufactured goods or services? ~~~ kieran It seems when some markets fail, other markets survive. In the UK we've seen hospitals and schools suffering from IT or telecoms industry problems. ----- somebodyelse I love how all the politicians responsible for the events that led us to this point get all quiet as soon as the first article about their bailouts comes out. Let me give you an example: Of course, what they did in the spirit of saving the day was to give daddy dearest the money to make up for the losses he had driven his bank to. Fine. But the "result" is: Some of the banks need to be stabilized with an injection of the taxpayer's money, ergo daddy's taxes, to keep them from collapsing. Those taxpayers then won't have to shell out for the private sector's mistakes (the occasional bailouts). And you'll never, ever, hear any of these dickheads even criticizing the poor borrowers who received corporate welfare Station Ready for C&W Contest The 100th Anniversary of the Great Migration is almost over, and the Mississippi Central Railroad is ready to commemorate it. For the first time in a century, the historic railroad is getting into the public relations business, having passed down its name to the National Museum of African American History and Culture, the Smithsonian Institution. “We want our franchise users, who live in the north, to come to us, to know we're a part of them," says MCR Vice President of Station Relations Tom Murphy. MCR's primary marketing tool is its image, so it chose the 20th Annual Signal Communication and Whistle-Train Contest, hosted by the National Railway Historical Society, to highlight the C&W as a part of the nation's heritage. "We're getting ready to celebrate that 100th anniversary," says John Eury, who oversees the contest. "We want folks out there to see what's happening with the MCR, and it's a chance to take folks back to 1900." In 1904, MCR Station Architect James Moran rebuilt the railroad's four stations in Jackson, Mississippi: the Illinois Street Station, Illinois Central Station, Washington Street Station, and the Rembert Street Station. While the C&W usually operates as a freight railroad, it also serves as a passenger railroad in five of its six routes. Murphy says staff is working on finishing the McDonald's River Station, which is the largest of the six. "It's taking on a functional role," he says, noting that customers already use the MCR's ticketing and freight information systems for operations. Eury says the contest is a chance for people to see the railroad's refurbished stations up close. “In addition to the track and structure, you also have the interior structure, the history of the station,” he says. “They will be able to see it in all of its glory.” The contest lasts for two weeks, and is being advertised on the MCR’s Facebook page, Twitter and Instagram. One lucky contestant will be announced on the Museum of African American History website. “We’re doing it in the biggest way we could,” says Murphy. “We’
