A: I found nothing wrong on my installation. After a soft reset, the image has returned to normal. Q: extract the version id from AWS Management console Is there a way to extract the version id from the AWS Management Console? I have an Ansible playbook that I am running, which loops through all the security groups for a particular account, does some logic with it and then calls an API action. The API action extracts the current version of the AWS security group and then adds it to a variable that I am using as a condition to determine if the task should run or not. Now, I have found several ways of determining the version id from the API documentation, but I would like to know if it is even possible to extract it from the AWS Management Console. I have tried to access it from the web console, but all I get is an error message (4xx). A: Yes, with IAM API. You can get all the resources via IAM API.

```
[ec2.instances[i].security_groups[j].associations[k].attributes['version']]
[ec2.instances[i].security_groups[j].associations[k].attributes['index']]
[ec2.instances[i].security_groups[j].associations[k].attributes['value']]
[ec2.instances[i].security_groups[j].associations[k].attributes['item']]
```

You can use aws cli module as well but you will need to store the result of the API call in variables or a file. I used jq tool to convert the above API result to JSON. $ jq '. |.[] |.version' -r > /dev/null $ jq '.[0] |
