Arttista is a software for draw pictures in an organic way, so drawing and painting art can have a real life and vitality. Arttista does not need to paint or draw in an unrealistic way, like some other software that make us look like in a illustrated book, a painting by hand or an illustration. The great point of Arttista is that every illustration is supported by its vectorization tool: it makes every drawing to be the same the old fashion way, give to our vector illustration the most important point, that is, it keeps every information intact, and make it possible to edit at any time. The visual aspect of Arttista is not only to give organic look, but we are really trying to make the user feel what a drawing a painting when he is drawing and painting with Arttista. Arttista has developed and it is already a great piece of art creation and imagination. We can work in combination with a great team. We are not a company, but an idea, an unrealized project, a stream of one another. If you feel like that, and feel in love with the idea, we would like to hear from you. We're looking forward to see you on arttista.com www.arttista.com I hope you enjoyed it and decide to use Arttista too. joboal Find me on twitter @joboal, feel free to ask and suggest. I am especially bad at pointing out why a particular software works for me. I don't always mention good points and rarely mention bad points because I don't want to get into a repetition of what's available in the system. I don't think about these bad points when I write reviews (they just don't register). I think I am looking at the problems from the wrong angle. Sure I may show "bad" points, but I want them to be so "bad" that you may well never find your way to the "good" points that would let you like the software. Software is still meant to get your job done and whatever would hinder that is surely a bad point. I was talking about myself when I wrote that but it would be a good practice
