Clinical study of percutaneous nephrolithotomy in the treatment of large kidney stones: a retrospective case review. Many studies have confirmed that percutaneous nephrolithotomy (PNL) is a reliable and safe technique for the treatment of large kidney stones, but the safety and efficacy of a single-session (SS) PNL were investigated. We conducted a retrospective case review of adults who had undergone PNL for kidney stones that were  $\geq 20$  mm in maximum diameter. The study was approved by our Institutional Review Board, and informed consent was obtained from all the patients. For patients treated between January 2005 and December 2014, the following data were recorded: patient demographics, anatomic renal parameters, stone size, operative parameters, and stone clearance. Postoperative complications were recorded, and the patients were followed up for an average of  $20.5 \pm 7.1$  months. A total of 250 patients were included, including 183 male and 67 female patients (mean age of  $44.6 \pm 11.4$  years). There were 206 (82.8%) patients with staghorn calculi, and 23 (9.2%) patients had previously undergone a failed extracorporeal shock wave lithotripsy treatment. The mean stone size was  $28.2 \pm 5.4$  mm. Complete stone clearance rates were 84.8% (221/250) for a single session and 97.2% (47/48) for double-session PNL. Surgery-related complications occurred in 12.8% (31/250) of the patients, and the most frequent were blood transfusion (2.4%, 6/250) and ileus (1.6%, 4/250). The average hospital stay was  $2.4 \pm 0.6$  days, and mean follow-up was  $20.5 \pm 7.1$  months. Percutaneous nephrolithotomy is a safe and effective method for the management of large kidney stones. Drew County Courthouse (Washington, North Carolina)

What's new in Brigador - Vol. I:

: How do you like your coffee? Chilling out and watching the end credits of The Descent last night was one of the best things I have done in a long time. Such a low-key explosion of energy and colour that your eyelids like to fall shut when you get too close to the TV. It's nice to have a couple hours of normal life again. I can't wait to see what I have to look forward to come Thursday night. We're going to see the second part of the Hot Fuzz series: Attack of the Killer Postmen. So here is part I: Am I allowed to be excited? Over the past couple of weeks I've been watching the following zombie movies: 'Raw', 'End of Days', 'The Merciful', 'Me vs. You' and 'How to Survive A Robot Uprising'. There are a few things that stand out in my mind at the moment about the way zombies are presented in these films. 1) I was half way through 'Me vs You' before I noticed that I had assumed that there were only 9 of these sentient machines invading my village. The director (Jonathan Bloom) states at some point that the enemy is 25,000 strong. But this implies that these machines have been quietly consuming us while we have been blissfully unaware of the crisis. I think the film implies that we are actually the monsters while they are the "Good guys". I like films that say it's very possible that humanity is a force for evil. 2) 'Imitating Zombies' is a brilliant concept that isn't hard to execute. I think the film is an extensive example of why we need to conserve our food and water supplies as a precaution against being invaded by 'mindless' zombies. The problem is that most people think of the zombie mentality this way. They imagine running around eating the bits of skin who have fallen away from a person's face. When I was telling my friends about all the famine and water shortage stories, they immediately visualised the movie. The machine didn't speak English and the bodies looked really different. 3) 'The Merciful' is a lovely romantic horror. A dead body made-up as a zombie is just the thing to bring out a person's animal instincts.
