What's there to do in Maj'Eyal? How can you tell a story? Essentially, you can tell any story you want. There are no limits. Every single path will be unique, and every decision you make will determine how your tale will end.

Armiger's Codex

You wake up in a cage. Before you are four books. If you could read them you would learn your story, the things you did to deserve to be caged, and a way out.

It is wide. It is a good distance from the shore, or the city. There are rocks here and there, and an old shipwreck that was two tides old.

Floating in silvery light, the continent of Ulek is preserved in a block of ice.

What the continent of Ulek lacks in size, it makes up for in variety. The map of Ulek that sits before you is based off of over 300 miles of coastline seen from the air. To add to this, other explorers have placed down their notes.

This is not the only map. There is also a story map, size, and a few puzzle maps.

Hunger is Destiny

The time has come again. Your appetite is as everlasting as your hunger for lives. It is a special energy that keeps any atoll alive, allowing life to thrive and flow throughout. This energy is slowly being drained from the continent, and the newly formed atolls are suffering. You alone

"I can't sleep. I feel like I'm going to die." He is awake. No doubt. The single room he is in is quite warm. He is hot. He feels that his body is a mess, and he feels a lot of pain. He can't move his head. He looks around. "Where am I?" "You're in a detention room. The one-room cells at Hinamizawa Juvenile Detention Center." "Juvenile detention center?" "They're holding you for your own safety. You're still a suspect in a murder case. But, you know, I don't think you're guilty. It was an accident." "An accident?" "The killer, the one that the police are chasing, is probably still at large." "Police?" "The police are still looking for you, but I don't think it was you." "Oh, really?" "The key to your handcuffs. The one you tried to get a hold of. The one you lost after you beat up that man with the blue ponytail." Hinamizawa Juvenile Detention Center. The single room where it all started. It seems to him that he hasn't been sleeping all this time. "Hey, Watanabe." "Yes?" "Can I have some water?" "Yes, of course." "Please give me some water." "Here you go." "Thank you." "Do you need a glass?" "No. It's okay." "Here, drink this." "Here, it's for you." He drinks a mouthful of the water. "That's enough." "Here." Watanabe gives him another glass. "Thank you." "It's okay. You did the right thing." "And you?" "Yeah, I've got nothing to

What's new in Hermes: Sibyls' Prophecy:

(Ultimate) File used for the tutorial was from www.fantasygrounds.ca Spoiler: Tutorial The Beginnings - The Ember Faith and The Phoenix Menace The barbarians lived on the outskirts of the farming settlement of Saint Joseph des Anges. They caroused and explored the wilds each winter and returned home each summer to consume their vast stockpiles of grain. Their people were simple farmers, living in peace with the neighboring tribes of neighboring farmers and the pantheon of beasts with whom they coexisted. One summer a small village built on a rise overlooking the farmstead when a dark mist gathered and riders charged out of the mist. It was a small raid and only one of the riders was armed, a glimpse of a flash as he drew his long sword and cut the scout alive. He quickly mounted and commanded the village to flee for the rest of the raiders. They reined up to look at the farmhouse of their quarry and then the village fell under siege. The Ember Faith were founded in the east by Lzrevgean the Seer. It was a menger of men, women and monsters. Some in the garb of stone, metal and wood, and some as phantoms of fire. The phantoms congregated around his throne, while the stone and metal fought their way through the countryside on their own blood driven quest to establish a kingdom. Lzrevgean promised them anything they asked for in return for absolute loyalty. Soon the people were more loyal to the chain mail than to the seer, even some of the powerful elders who on their own land possessed land and beasts. The people failed their humanity and the strength of their chains. They paid their tithes and prostrated before Lzrevgean, yet he swore that he would live forever. They worshiped him and their phantoms until he declared some human to be better than others. His people became the Phoenix Menace. They were given the lands not taken by the stone and the metal. The Ember Faith were left with the lands they took for themselves. The Phoenix Menace flogged their new subjects into being beasts of burden to be ridden like brute beasts. The Phoenix Menace forged armor and weapons for their own people and trained animals to serve the brave and holy warriors. They too became more loyal to their chains and their phantoms and even grew to worship. The

Here's the code:
