The linearity of enzyme-linked immunosorbent assays (ELISA) for the detection of Escherichia coli O157:H7 was examined. Two standard curves were constructed for each antigen in direct-format and indirect-format ELISA using both commercially available recombinant antigens (TREO-R) and antiserum against intact cells of E. coli O157:H7, and a method for the determination of linearity errors was developed. Both O-antigen and LPS seemed to be less linear in the direct-format assay than in the indirect-format assay. For the intact cells of E. coli O157:H7, the antigen density of the solid phase is dependent on the interaction between antigen and antigen-binding antibody on the surface of the solid phase. The analyses presented here revealed that the variable antigen density might account for the less linear values of direct-format ELISA for detection of E. coli O157:H7. a unique thing (indeed the last time I wore one I found it easy to slip over my head and out of the way when I was out on the dance floor!), and allowing them to perform home duties. The next movement in the makeup is removing the liner. If you are using a waterline liner, just rub a bit of moisturizer to it and it should come off. This step will help prevent your skin from breaking out. If you are using a pencil liner, just use makeup remover and let it sit for a minute or so. The residue will just blend right off! The last step in makeup removal is the foundation. It is just as easy to remove it as it is the first time you used it! I recommend applying your favorite moisturizer
