I just came across a VBA function named "Close" and I'm not sure what the difference between it and a "Fold" function. Is one meant to be used in cases where the other would be used? And vice-versa? A: In the context of MS Excel the two concepts are equivalent. I can't think of any reason why you would want to "Fold" a row or column (or to "Close" a parenthesis grouping in a formula) and trying to use "Close" or "Fold" for something else will only confuse you. A method based on mass spectrometry combined with electrical discharge detection was used to identify and quantitate a series of phenolic compounds, including resveratrol (RESV) in 14 commercial Chinese vinegars. In this method, the precursor and product ions of phenolic acids were observed as protonated molecular ions or radical anions and fragmentations. The reaction of phenolic acids with p-anisidine generates p-anisidine adducts, which were detected as protonated molecular ions and fragment ions of ring-opened products. The major isomer of RESV in red Chinese vinegars was identified as 3'-O-methylresveratrol, and its limit of quantitation (LOQ) was 0.12 µg/mL, which is below the traditional standard method. The LOQ of p-anisidine adducts of phenolic acids in 1,4-butanediol-treated red Chinese vinegar, which contained relatively high amounts of RESV, was 0.06 µg/mL. The method was applied to the quantitation of RESV in vinegars with an average recovery of 88.1-105.4%.Molecular cloning and characterization of the murine Tuberoinfundibular peptide receptor 1 gene: expression of receptor mRNA in the hypothalamus and pituitary. The expression of Tuberoinfundibular peptide receptor 1 (TIP-R1) gene in mice was analyzed with the genomic DNA and complementary DNA (cDNA) of the gene. The TIP-R1 cDNA was composed of 1,759 nucleotides and had a single open reading frame encoding a polypeptide of 556 amino acid residues. The predicted amino acid sequence of the mouse TIP-R1 was 95% identical to that of human TIP-R1, sharing 56-63% amino acid identity with other receptor subtypes. The predicted molecular weight of the receptor protein was 61 kDa. The expression of the mTIP-R1 mRNA in tissues was
