Adaptive Vector Packaging. In human gene-editing research, designing and adapting specific guide RNAs (gRNAs) for desired genome modification is a time-consuming process. An in vitro adaptive vector packaging (AVP) strategy with a brief programming protocol for gRNA folding was developed to enable the rapid and robust selection of gRNAs from candidate libraries, and to facilitate the incorporation of gRNAs into Cas9-encoding plasmids. Using this simple strategy, a library of plasmids encoding optimized gRNAs that induce 100% knockout efficiency for targeted human gene disruption was produced, which can be rapidly adapted to specific target genes for any research community. By removing the step of producing gRNA libraries, this new strategy can potentially reduce costs and labor time in the production of gRNAs.Q: Prism and
