Opening JPEGs After you open an image, go to the Basic menu and choose Develop Settings (as shown in Figure 2-1). You have three options there. You can use all of the adjustments available in Lightroom to work on the image, and then you can export the adjusted image to other formats or export it to Photoshop. You can also export to another Lightroom application if you use that app to open the file. FIGURE 2-1: Choose Develop Settings to access Lightroom's other options. ## Working with JPEGs By default, Lightroom makes sure that you don't have any adjustments

Safety and efficacy of the naloxone-reversed opioid overdose. Opioid overdose is a growing public health problem. There is limited data on the frequency and efficacy of naloxone in overdose reversal. Our objective was to describe the demographics, clinical features, naloxone doses, and clinical outcomes of naloxone-reversed opioid overdose and to identify associations between naloxone administration and outcome. This is a retrospective analysis of a prospectively maintained registry of consecutive patients evaluated at an urban ED with an opioid overdose. Patients who had ≥ 0.1 microg/mL naloxone in blood or urine within 2 hours after naloxone administration were considered as receiving naloxone. We considered the outcome of naloxone administration and analyzed demographics, clinical presentation, naloxone dose, laboratory data, disposition, and clinical course. One hundred seventy-five consecutive patients had an opioid overdose. Fifty-eight (34%) patients received naloxone, with an average naloxone dose of 103.5 microg/kg. Mortality occurred in 24 patients (41%) of whom 14 (26%) died of an opioid overdose, and five (9%) of whom died from other causes. In the opioid overdose group, naloxone doses were associated with increased heart rate, blood pressure, respiratory rate, opioid concentration in blood, and lower Glasgow Coma Scale (GCS) scores. Naloxone administration was not associated with likelihood of respiratory depression, hypoxia, hypotension, or need for intubation. No naloxone patient required intubation. Patients who received naloxone were more likely to be taken to the intensive care unit (ICU) or undergo cardiac monitoring. No adverse effects were noted. Naloxone administration is safe in opioid overdose. The average naloxone dose in opioid overdose was high, but there was no correlation with clinical outcomes. Opioid overdose does not predict naloxone administration. # Contributing to PulsePoll You can help by contributing to the project, for example: - If you want to make changes to the sample files, you can do so by forking the PulsePoll project or [requesting a pull request](from that project. - If you are interested in learning how

A new method for the preparation of high-quality radioactive colloids. An interesting method has been developed for the preparation of high-quality liquid (or solid) aqueous colloidal dispersions. This method is based on the use of sodium and potassium metal particles of about 1 micron, which are used as solid propellants. When used under appropriate conditions, the collision process between these particles and a glass surface enables one to obtain a highly homogeneous liquid colloid containing active potassium radioisotopes (with a specific activity ranging from 55 to 75 Ci/g). Studies have been done on the influence of some parameters on the stability of the aqueous dispersions, using for example, the size of the initial metal particles and the relative concentrations of water and liquor in the dispersions. Preliminary experiments have shown that the procedure may be applied to the preparation of colloids containing other radioisotopes. Development of the chest atlas atlas for pneumonia disease. To produce an atlas that describes the developments of the chest at the time of pneumonia and to provide a reference point for clinical research into the pathogenesis of the disease. The study comprised a retrospective review of chest radiographs, hospital records, and tomographic findings obtained in a single center between May 1995 and June 2007. Children aged from birth to 15 years with radiographic evidence of pneumonia were included. Children with nonpneumonic conditions were excluded. All images were interpreted and discussed by a pediatric radiologist and a general radiologist, and children were separated into two groups according to the presence or absence of a consolidated lung. The same radiologists again reviewed the same chest radiographs and tomographic findings from two large-scale pneumonia longitudinal studies (1) and (2) that were also undertaken at the same center. Out of 4233 children from whom files were reviewed, 2231 (51.8%) had pneumonia. Among them, 905 (43.1%) had consolidated lung. The most common symptoms in this group of patients were fever (96.3%) and cough (95.6%). The most common symptom of infants was fever (97.5%). The most common symptom in children aged from 2 to 5 years was cough (97.1%), whereas the symptom of children aged >15 years was cough or abnormal breath sounds (96.4%). The time between the onset of symptoms and the first medical visit was significantly shorter in infants than that in children aged 1 to 2 years (5.1 ± 5.4 days vs. 16
