Beverage dispensing machines have been known in the art for many years. One example of such a machine is described in U.S. Pat. No. 3,539,337. Beverage dispensing machines may be found at any variety of locations, such as bars, restaurants, taverns, lounges, clubs, and the like. Some beverage dispensing machines are manually operated, requiring a person to use the machine to prepare a beverage, and to then dispense the beverage to the customer. Other beverage dispensing machines are "self serve" machines, which are operated by customers themselves. In these machines, the customer mixes beverage ingredients, such as a liquid and a powdered mix, for example, and dispenses the beverage from the machine by simply operating a dispensing valve to release and discharge the mixed beverage. The self serve beverage dispensing machines typically include a reservoir that stores a supply of a liquid beverage mix. The liquid beverage mix is normally stored in the reservoir in liquid form and mixed with a liquid propellant, such as carbonated or non-carbonated water, at the point of dispense to form a mixed beverage. Water is a common liquid for beverage mix, and carbonated or non-carbonated water is a common liquid propellant. Two well known mixed beverage dispensing machines are described in U.S. Pat. No. 4,852,851 and U.S. Pat. No. 4,883,454, both of which are incorporated herein by reference. In the design of such beverage dispensing machines, it is desirable to integrate the dispensing valves for dispensing the mixed beverages into the reservoir at an ergonomic location. It is further desirable to provide a valve that is durable, that is reliable, and easy to use. The present invention is intended to provide these advantageous features in a beverage dispensing machine. Dorylophidae Dorylophidae (meaning "sea slug family") is a family of sea 0cc13bf012
