(previously known as Cricinfo.com). Easy desktop integration It doesn't include any special options or configuration settings, so it can be used by those looking for a straightforward news reader without having to spend time tinkering with customization features. The widget gets swiftly installed with minimal user intervention. It shows a small frame on the desktop that can be moved anywhere on the screen with the aid of the mouse cursor. View the newest cricket matches It may take a while to load the newest information from the website, after which you can find out the team names and scores. Matches are automatically rotated in the panel after a while. However, it's not possible to modify the update frequency, nor to expand the panel to view details about all matches in a list. Most widgets specifically made for Windows 7 and Vista share some basic settings. To be more specific, you can change the panel's opacity level and set it to stay on top of other currently open windows. There are no other options worth mentioning. Evaluation and conclusion We haven't experienced compatibility issues in our tests, since the tool didn't cause the operating system to hang, crash or indicate errors. Unsurprisingly, it left minimal footprint on system resources usage, thanks to the fact that it needed a low amount of CPU and memory to work properly. Unfortunately, the project is no longer being developed, since desktop gadgets have not been implemented after Windows 7. Nevertheless, you can use Cricket to stay updated with the latest cricket scores if you're running Windows 7 or Vista, regardless of the processor's architecture. Overview Windows Vista and Windows 7 sport many robust features and enhancements, including extensive management capabilities. Many third-party programs simply aren't compatible with the operating systems, and the vast majority of Windows-based accessories no longer work properly. ### What's New In?

★ Cricket is a cricket score widget for the Windows 7 and Vista operating systems. Cricket shows the latest cricket scores, complete wicket information, upcoming fixtures and an upcoming events widget, alongside the possibility to open a webpage with the result of a specific match. ★ Cricket needs a very low amount of resources from your PC: less than 100kb of data, and a minimal amount of processing. ★ Cricket needs a minimal amount of memory from the hard disk: 15-20mb. ★ Cricket can be used with any screen resolution. ★ Cricket does not have any connections with 3rd party websites. It does NOT fetch the data from the official cricket website. However, on screens with high resolution, the information appears smoothly and the Cricket widget acts as an ideal newsreader. ★ Cricket uses a fast XML parsing function to update the widgets scores. Cricket does not use a data base to update its scores. This processing will always be faster than fetching from a remote website. ★ When something is wrong with the widget, or Cricket is down, the cricket widget will not update. ★ Because of the handling of the xml parsing, Cricket can be used without a proxy. ★ The cricket widget uses Web API to reach the website. ★ Cricket works for Windows 7 and Vista. ★ The cricket widget can be moved to other locations on the desktop by using the mouse. ★ Cricket has its own icons, text and background. ★ Cricket can be restarted by clicking on the taskbar icon and restart the application with the Open, Close, and Zoom buttons. ★ The widget is resizable. ★ The cricket widget is a shareware software. ★ If you like the software you can support it
