NEW YORK (CNNMoney.com) -- The man behind the operation that shoved billions of dollars into mortgage securities has been touting a plan to convert much of the nation's $700 billion rescue plan into loans to be made directly to homeowners. The "National Homeownership Preservation Plan," proposed by former GOP chairman and General Motors (GM, Fortune 500) CEO Robert L. DuPont, would provide much-needed liquidity to struggling borrowers by turning the $700 billion TARP fund into a loan program. The plan doesn't need congressional approval, as the $700 billion bank bailout does, because it uses money that already has been earmarked for other uses. But it would also insulate the Treasury from the cost of the TARP program as well as cost spikes in foreclosures and would help keep borrowers from having to take "sub-prime" loans. However, critics say it would put taxpayers on the hook for billions more in losses. DuPont said he's been in talks with the White House, the Treasury and the Fed for weeks about the plan and that the proposal would involve $68 billion to $80 billion in government funds. But while the concept is likely to resonate with homeowners frustrated at being stuck in underwater mortgages, some policy experts say DuPont's proposal wouldn't likely do the trick. In fact, David Skeel, dean of the Robert E. Lee School of Law and former director of the FTC's bureau of consumer protection, said he suspects that the concept DuPont is talking about is "not a home loan program." "It sounds like he's suggesting that they modify the mortgages," Skeel said. "But the problem is, it's not a home loan program." In order for a home loan program to work, it would need an exit strategy that would allow the government and the creditors to sell 6d1f23a050
