Differences in skin protection between ultraviolet-B radiation (UV-B) and psoralen plus ultraviolet-A radiation (PUVA) in patients with severe psoriasis are examined. Thirty-four patients with an average age of 39 years, who were in a stable phase of the disease, and who had been previously treated with PUVA were treated with UV-B alone or combined with UV-A. They were compared with 34 patients treated with PUVA alone. The evaluation of the clinical improvement of psoriasis showed a statistically significant greater improvement in the PUVA-plus-UV-A group than in the UV-B group at 4, 12 and 24 weeks after the beginning of the treatment. No significant differences were observed after week 32. The number of therapeutically-unsuccessful treatments was statistically more frequent in the UV-B group. As long as the treatment continues, the failure frequency is the same in both groups. UV-B plus UV-A is a more effective treatment for psoriasis than c6a93da74d
